Arbalest: (Fr: arbalète, Ger. Armbrust, Crossbow) The correct term for a crossbow, introduced early in the 14th century.

Caltrop: Sharp spikes, resembling 'jacks' used to maim a horse. Robert the Bruce used them at Bannockburn, and there are references to spurs being used for this same purpose.

Coronal: The head of a lance, fitted for the joust of peace instead of the sharp point used for war. Using multiple points (generally but not always limited to three) it spread the impact and reduced the damage.

Couter: The defense for the elbow, generally mistakenly called the "elbow cop" in modern SCA parlance.

Epee: French for Sword.

Fluting: Ribbing which is hammered into armored plates for strength.

Fuller: The groove forged and ground into the center of a sword blade in order to lighten it.

Haubergen: A shorter version of the hauberk, a shirt made of mail, usually laced down the sides after 1300.

Klappvisier: The first visored defense for the bascinet, originated in the German states.

Latten: Brass, Bronze or a mixture of the two. Generally a copper base metal with elements of tin or zinc plus other trace elements.

Mace: A short mass weapon not unlike a heavy club.

Mantling: The cloth decor suspended from a helmet, commonly illustrated in armorial artwork.

Nock: Notch in a bow and in an arrow, designed to keep the arrow in its proper place for firing.

Pavaise: A large rectangular or oval shield, usually as tall as a man, carried by infantry and archers to defend themselves from opposing missile weapons.
